AN UNEXPECTED PREDICAMENT

Your company space is hit by fire damage, storm damage, water damage or other force of nature. It is a true nightmare to any business. There are many details to tend to in a very short time. But the most important question is; how soon can your company be back in operation?

De Boer has been called on to work with a growing number of retailers needing short-term support. These have included Ikea, which discovered the advantages of temporary structures after a busy store in Amsterdam was badly damaged by heavy rainfall. Seventy thousand litres of water cascaded through the building, ripping apart the roof and leaving the entire upper showroom out of action. De Boer's experts were on site within 24 hours and were hired to erect a showroom on the store's adjacent car park. Two structures were supplied, providing Ikea with a temporary showroom measuring 1,600 square metres – and enabling customers to return to the store within a week of the flooding taking place.

In the UK, De Boer was praised after coming to the rescue of a leading Scottish wholesaler that lost its mighty cash-and-carry warehouse in a devastating blaze. De Boer's replacement structure – measuring 5,100 square metres – allowed the business to resume trading just five months after the fire.

YOU NEED EXTRA OFFICE SPACE – FAST

Your company acquires a new order and is confronted with an influx in production causing you to have to expand into extra business space. The future however is uncertain and to invest in permanent expansion is not the first thing on your mind. De Boer offers a fast and appropriate solution to your problem. De Boer will build the required business space within a very short time period.

Thanks to flexible arrangements you are able to choose to rent from a short-term to a long-term period. Three months or three years? Not a problem. This type of solution is not likely to come around in the regular real estate sector. Additionally, the industrially designed semi-permanent structures by De Boer can be erected on the business site itself. Your staff will not have to travel to an external location and the business is able to continue as it did before, saving you travel expenses.
